Engineered Marble

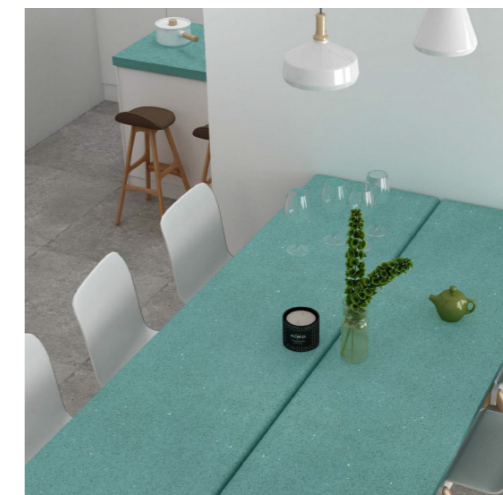

Engineered marble is primarily a composite material made of marble dust and chips, in addition to resin binder and pigments. It minimizes wastage and utilizes recycled waste products generated during mining operations and marble processing phases, thereby reducing industrial waste and energy consumption. Anvee offers the consumers an affordable and eco- friendly alternative to Natural Marble, while maintaining a greater level of colour consistency and strength. Engineered Marble is available in a wide range of shades, finishes, designs, sizes and thicknesses. It is extremely hard and has a very low porosity. Not only is it scratch and stain resistant, it also discourages microbial growth. Due to such properties, it can be used as kitchen countertops, bathroom installations, flooring as well as wall covering.

Engineered Quartz

Engineered Quartz is a mix of 90-94% ground quartz and 6-10% resins and pigments that are firmly combined to form a nonporous and highly durable tile or slab. It is extensively used for construction and architectural designing purposes. Engineered Quartz can be easily manufactured at any place while consuming less energy and is an environmental- friendly countertop material. It can be used as the floor covering in large commercial/public complexes like airports, metro stations, malls and courthouses. It can be produced in desired shapes, designs, finishes and sizes. Engineered Quartz discourages microbial growth and can be used as kitchen countertops and vanity tops, performing very well in almost every space, both in terms of functionality and aesthetics.
